(d) The Department of Justice had invited the views of the High Courts and the State Governments in July 2001 regarding the number of working days in the High Courts and the curtailment of their vacations. Replies have since been received from 11 High Courts and 6 State Governments. The High Court of Uttaranchal has increased the number of its working days in a year from 210 to 224 and the High Court of Karnataka from 210 to 214; High Court of Jharkhand has no objection if any decision is taken at appropriate level to increase the number of working days; other High Courts have not favoured any increase in the number of their working days. Of the six State Governments which have so far responded, the Mizoram Government has supported the present level of atleast 210 working days per year for the High Court; the Government of Maharashtra, Goa and Rajasthan have favoured increase in the number of annual working days of their respective High Courts; the Government of Meghalaya has no objection to the increase in the number of the working days in the High Court and the Government of Punjab has supported the view of the Punjab and Haryana High Court that it is not necessary to curtail the vacations.
